The average daily circulation of the Barre Daily Times for the week ending Saturday was copies, the largest paid circulation of any daily paper in this section.

4,180

To adjourn or not to adjourn is the question in Montpelier this week.

In the case of Mr. Mansur of Newport, it was Zophar and no farther.

If anyone does not believe that football is king just now let him take up a Sunday paper.

The new state's attorney is already shutting the gates against illegal liquor selling. More power to his elbow!

It is a mistake to suppose that the senior senator for the Empire state, the Honorable Thomas Collier Platt, is incapable of further usefulness. He is not too old or too seriously incapacitated either in the physical sense or intellectually, or too shamefully discredited in his public and private relation to the community to perform now, at once, this week, today, the greatest service which it has ever been in his power to render to his honorable constituents, the people of New York. It is the statesman's last opportunity to win their approval and applause. With their fingers defending their olfactory, they will applaud him with enthusiastic feet.

—New York Sun.

In spite of these withering, shriveling words, the senior Senator from New York continues to hold his seat in the national assembly. Not only that, but he says that he will not resign.

The balking of Z. S. Mansur out of the contest for the governorship of Vermont must have been done after considerable reflection and much feeling about. If other aspirants for office would follow the same course, they would save themselves a great deal of mortification and a tremendous amount of wasted energy. Mr. Mansur watched the slow setting of the political sun and he found that he was not destined to be the one on whom the shining orb cast its benignant rays. Thus saved by his circumspection, the Newport man is able to fend off the disagreeable things. He need not feel sorely disappointed over what he found in his investigation of the situation, for the undoubted sentiment was not so much against him personally as in favor of some other man. With that comforting thought and with a long and honorable career to rely upon, he is able to fall again into the ranks with the rest of us, believing also that the days are passing when the man seeks the office so much as the office seeks the man.

WING-CLIPPING CONTINUES.

The decision of the supreme court of Vermont, given Saturday, nullifying the order of the state railroad commissioners to the Rutland railroad to erect a new station at Bartonville, has a direct bearing on a local case. Last summer a largely signed petition was prepared in Barre and addressed to the state board, asking that a public hearing be given on the application that the Central Vermont railroad be ordered to erect a new station in Barre. This position is now in the hands of the commission; but it is, according to the position just taken by the supreme court, powerless for its purpose. Barre people will therefore continue to whistle for that new station. The commission was undertaking this work under act of the legislature of 1902, which says: "When in the judgment of the commission, after investigation and hearing upon reasonable notice, it appears that repairs are necessary upon any railroad in this state, or that any addition to the rolling stock, or any addition to or change in the rate of fare for freight or passengers, or that any change in running or connections of local passenger trains, or in the manner of operating the road and conducting its business is reasonable and expedient in order to promote the security, convenience or accommodation of the public, or to prevent violation of the law, or to prevent discrimination, usurpation or extortion, the commission shall order the same and after giving notice of such order may fix a time within which the same shall be made, and for good cause may extend the same. A person or corporation owning or operating a railroad shall comply with such order of the commission."

But the supreme court says no. This is the second time that the state railroad commission has had its wings clipped by the supreme court of Vermont. A short time ago its order to the Rutland railroad that locomotives must be run with the cow-catcher ahead was nullified. Verily the Vermont railroad commission is a weakling.

DYER IS INDICTED.

Charged With Embezzlement From St. Louis Subtreasury.

St. Louis, Nov. 19.—The federal grand jury turned an indictment against receiving Teller D. P. Dyer, Jr., son of United States Attorney D. P. Dyer, Saturday in connection with the shortage of $61,500 in the St. Louis subtreasury. The charge against Dyer is embezzlement.

The federal grand jury was convened Wednesday and began inquiry into the shortage of $61,500. Soon after the grand jury convened Saturday a report of its finding was made to the court. Mr. Dyer was not taken into custody immediately, as it was stated that a capias would be issued, and he would then be taken into custody by the United States marshal.

Later Mr. Dyer was arrested, but was released on a bond of $10,000.

STRAY PICKINGS
OF LOCAL INTEREST

The nerve-tension under which motorists on electric railroads work was well exemplified on the Barre and Montpelier system on lower Main street the other day. The incident also showed that prompt action is one of the prime requisites of the man at the controller. A car was jostling along with Motor-man Charles Burke in charge. When it had almost reached the small trestle opposite Whitcomb Bros' machine shop, the motor-man glanced down and was startled to see a little girl pop her head through the ties and watch the approach of the oncoming car, all unconscious of her danger. Quick as a flash, Motor-man Burke reversed the power. He almost sweated blood, but he brought his car to a halt just two feet from the child's head. Had he been less prompt the girl would have been completely decapitated. The tot, having run away from home, had found a hiding place on a shelving rock just beneath the trestle. Hearing the rumble of the approaching car, she had partially arisen, and not knowing the danger, continued to watch the car in a fascinated manner. Ask a motor-man about it and he will tell you that it is trying to drive the nerves to drive a car through a city street.

A Barre man moved recently and since he was going into a house having gas ranges, he decided to leave his kitchen range in the old house, as it had cooked about its quota of roasts. Not wishing to clutter the next occupant of the old place, he notified a certain man, who may be called Jerry, that he might have the stove for the calling for it. Jerry got delayed about removing the stove, and the owner of the house, becoming anxious to get the veteran wood-burner out of the way of the next occupant, notified a junk dealer to carry out the stove. The junk dealer was more sharp for bargains than Jerry and promptly took the stove. Meanwhile Mrs. B., the new occupant of the house, installed a new kitchen range, complete, with modern improvements.

Presently along came Jerry with the express wagon and helped to get the stove promised him. Entering the kitchen while Mrs. B. was upstairs, he spied the new $40 range and his eyes glowed over the gift. He marvelled that anyone should want to give away a new $40 stove, but Jerry was not sticking to the philosophy and proceeded to take down the stovepipe, piece by piece it came down and then Jerry and his helper with a heave-ho deposited the entire stove into the cart. As the same time Mrs. B. came downstairs to get dinner. She glanced at the place where her $40 range was and found it not there. She looked at the door, but the window (we do not mean that she actually threw her eyes away) and saw her stove disappearing around the corner in Jerry's cart. If ever a 100-yard sprint was done in ten seconds flat, it was done then, and Jerry was acquainted with the fact quite forcibly that he was lugging off the wrong stove. Being an honest man, Jerry turned around and went back. Silently he and his helper set up the stove and piece by piece strung the pipe. Now Jerry is delivering sermons on the evil of procrastination.

Nature's garb is sufficient to remind us of non-comforting thoughts of the wintry months ahead without artificial assistance. So we respectfully make the motion that the seats on the City hall park have outlived their present usefulness. There they stand, partly buried in snow, memories of those pleasant summer evenings when, in the dark shadows, cooling couples were wont to assemble and weary pedestrians found rest and retirement for a period. Not at hour of the day or evening up to mid-night when some of the seats were not occupied. The gentle breeze, sighing through the tree-tops, the light trickle of the water from the fountain, the unobscured but well-fitting seats—what joy! But alas, 'tis past. Those snow-covered seats now serve only to bring the horrible nightmare of a shivering winter more fully toward realization. Besides, there won't be any print left on the seats at this rate.

JINGLES AND JESTS.

The Discontented Man.

He wooed and won a pretty girl
With hair of shining gold;
She loved him with a loyalty
Quite touching to behold.
But other people's wives he used
Approvingly to scan,
And growl and grumble at his own—
The discontented man.

His business prospered every day,
Another store he leased;
He bought a house and motor-car,
His bank account increased.
But still he wore a gloomy face—
"While Jones is in the van
My trade is going back," exclaimed
The discontented man.

His children in and out of school
Where well behaved and bright;
They reached the head of every class
And studied day and night.
"It didn't take me half so long
To learn what I began—
I wasn't such a dunce," complained
The discontented man.

He went abroad, and viewed unmoved
The Rhine's majestic flow,
The snowy splendor of the Alps,
The matchless lakes below.
"I want to get a steamer home
As quickly as I can;
There's here worth seeing," cried
The discontented man.

At last he left his earthly cares
To mount the starry skies
And knock upon the pearly gates
That lead to Paradise.
And though to him the portals wide
St. Peter dimly ran,
"You're long enough about it," said
The discontented man.

BLACK HAND FIRES BOMB.

Threatened to Kill Children if Italian Did Not Send Money.

New York, Nov. 19.—Hundreds of panes of glass were shattered, several doors were blown from their hinges and hundreds of persons clad only in night clothing rushed into the street in a panic early Saturday when a bomb exploded in the hallway of a tenement house at 23 Stanton street.

Pietro Realnuto, an Italian, who has a delicatessen store on the ground floor of the Stanton street house, told the police that he had received numerous letters from the Black Hand demanding money. The last, which was received only two days ago, informed the store-keeper that unless he sent money to the writer at once they would kill his two children.

PITH AND POINT.

Inquisitiveness encourages lying.
To say a man lacks tact is a polite way of saying he is impolite.
Considering how popular it is, "I forgot" is a mighty poor excuse.

Ambition is a funny thing. It makes some people rich and others poor.
How people love to gossip and how they do hate to be planned down when questioned!

When you step up to a crowd and the man who is talking stops, that's a sign you're not wanted there.

Don't be a wallflower. Get up and dance. People may frown on you for a time, but they will soon learn to keep out of your way.

When a little girl hampers her doll for you it is a compliment, but when she is a grown woman and names her baby for you there may be another motive in connection.—Aitchison Globe.

LAW POINTS.

The power of the state in the exercise of its police power to revoke a physician's license to practice is sustained in McFert v. Packer (Kan.), 1 L. R. A. (N. S.), 811.

The approval by the state commission of a freight based upon limited valuation of the property is held in Everett v. Norfolk and Southern Railway Company (N. C.), 1 L. R. A. (N. S.), 985, not to absolve the carrier from liability for full value of the property if lost through its negligence.

A passenger notified that the next station at which the train will stop is his destination is held in Baltimore and Ohio Southwestern Railroad Company v. Mullen (Ill.), 2 L. R. A. (N. S.), 115, to have a right to assume that the car will stop at the proper place for him to get off.

Charcoal an Antidote.

Japanese physicians declare, says Red Cross Notes, that it is impossible for internal poison to result in death if the victim swallows a quantity of charcoal as soon as the first gastro-intestinal disturbance is felt. Charcoal not only absorbs the gases, but has a special action upon many alkaloids and poisons.
